

GuideAbout UsAdvertisingMarketplacePodcastsPartners

rvatourism

Fueled by Neighborhoods

2 February 2015

BEERS, BANJOES AND TACOS AT THE CAMEL

The thing I knew about The Camel before I'd even been there is that you go for the music.

I can't not mention the music. That's really what The Camel is about right?

There's a show every. single. day. Check out their calendar.

And, like, some decent shows! Some that you wouldn't expect to be in a dark bar sort of all alone there on W. Broad Street. But mostly just a good variety: blues, singer/songwriter, whatever Clap Your Hands Say Yeah qualifies as, and things like beer and banjo Thursdays.

Yes, they have beer too. Twenty-eight beers on tap. Craft beers, local beers and beers recommended just for you by a knowledgeable bartender.

But those aren't the things I went there for last week. I found myself there at 3 p.m. What happens at The Camel at 3 p.m.?, I wondered.

But I was hungry. And, it turns out, the food is great. Sweet potato fries with blue cheese? Texas caviar as a side? Small menu, but with a good variety and reasonably priced options.

There weren't a lot of people there. It was quiet. The guy behind the bar had all the tables casually under control by himself. You can sit outside if it's nice.

I've heard, but not seen, that on Sundays you can get all three things at once (live music, craft beer, texas caviar) during The Camel's live music brunches.

So. I guess I just wanted everyone to know The Camel, known to most as a music venue, can also just be a spot for a beer and a fish taco at 3 p.m. on a Saturday.

Kelli Yoder
Senior blogger/Writer
kelli@rvatourism.com

#the fan #food #drink #music #venue
#craft beer #vegetarian #burgers #bars

Share this Tumblr Facebook Twitter

Google+